Iconic Stones singer Jagger to undergo heart surgery

The band's North American tour has been postponed.

Rolling Stones frontman Mick Jagger will undergo heart surgery this week following the postponement of the band's North American tour for medical reasons, according to a published report.

The U.S. website Drudge Report, citing unidentified sources, said Jagger, 75, would undergo surgery this week in New York to replace a heart valve. New York Post's Page Six website, citing unidentified sources, said the surgery would involve placing a stent in the singer's heart.

Representatives for Jagger in the United States did not return requests for comment. A spokesman for the British band in London declined to comment on the Drudge Report article.

The band on Saturday announced it was postponing all dates on its tour of the United States and Canada to give Jagger time to receive medical treatment. It did not specify what treatment Jagger needed but said he is expected to make a full recovery.

The North American tour had been scheduled to run from April 20 until June 29.

Jagger was photographed on Sunday in Miami Beach, Florida, on the beach with his current girlfriend, ballet dancer Melanie Hamrick, their young son, and daughter Georgia May, one of his seven adult children.

The British singer has not explained his medical issue but told fans in a tweet on Saturday that he would be "working very hard to be back on stage as soon as I can."

After a storied sex, drugs and rock-'n-roll lifestyle in his earlier days, Jagger now follows a healthy diet, runs and works out frequently.

R. Kelly lawyer: Avenatti has 'polluted' sex case

2 R. Kelly's attorney accused the Cook County State's Attorney Monday of succumbing to pressure from attorney Michael Avenatti in bringing sex-abuse charges against the R&B singer in Illinois, saying his involvement has irreparably tainted the case. Steve Greenberg made the accusations in a court filing and in comments after a Monday pretrial hearing in Chicago, highlighting recent charges against Avenatti in New York that accuse him of trying to shake down Nike. Greenberg told reporters outside court there has been a "rush to prosecute because of pressure — all polluted — by Michael Avenatti." He said prosecutors "got in bed with Avenatti and Avenatti is toxic." The accusation that the office of Cook County State's Attorney Kim Foxx cooperated too closely with Avenatti comes amid criticism of her office's handling of the Jussie Smollett case. Bryce baby! Phillies OF Harper, wife expecting

3 Bryce Harper is ready to raise a li'l slugger in Philadelphia. Harper announced Monday on Instagram that he and his wife, Kayla, are expecting their first child, a boy. Harper posted a photo of him and his wife holding a "Baby Harper" No. 3 jersey in front of the Benjamin Franklin Bridge. He posted a second photo of a sonogram on top of a baby Phillies jacket. Harper wrote, "Philly raised little man will be! #BabyHarper." The 26-year-old outfielder did not announce a due date. But the baby can almost take the wheel by the time dad's $330 million, 13-year contract expires with the Phillies. Harper was a big hit in his debut weekend with the Phillies, hitting two mammoth home runs and leading the Phillies to a 3-0 start. "Congratulations to @bryceharper3 and Kayla!" the Phillies tweeted. Trump: United States census 'meaningless' without citizenship question

Census is required every 10 years by the Constitution.

President Donald Trump on Monday injected himself into one of the most consequential cases of the current Supreme Court term, saying the nation's 2020 census would be "meaningless" without adding a citizenship question to the questionnaire.

The comment on Twitter came ahead of an expected Supreme Court ruling by the end of June on whether Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross' decision to add the citizenship question violated federal law.

"Can you believe that the Radical Left Democrats want to do our new and very important Census Report without the all important Citizenship Question," Trump tweeted. "Report would be meaningless and a waste of the $Billions [ridiculous] that it costs to put together!"

Trump's critics have accused the White House of encouraging an undercount by dissuading Hispanics and other immigrants from participating in the census, disproportionately affecting Democratic-leaning states and municipalities.

Many states, cities and civil rights groups have gone to court over the citizenship question, which is among a series of White House policies signaling tighter control over immigration.

These include Trump's declaration in February of a national emergency to obtain funds for a wall on the U.S.-Mexico border, and his threat to close the border as soon as this week, disrupting legal crossings as well as trade.

The U.S. Constitution requires a census counting the number of residents every 10 years.

Results are used to draw political boundaries, allocate seats in Congress and at the state and local level, and distribute roughly $800 billion of federal funds.

"The census is the administration's new front on its war on immigration and, sadly, the president's tweet today bears out that concern," said Terri Ann Lowenthal, a former staff director on the House census oversight committee who now advises groups seeking an accurate 2020 count.

"Can you believe that the Radical Left Democrats want to do our new and very important Census Report without the all important Citizenship Question."
President Trump, on Twitter

When Ross announced the addition of a citizenship question in March 2018, he said it was in response to a Department of Justice request for data to help enforce the Voting Rights Act, which protects eligible voters from discrimination.

Only U.S. citizens can vote in federal elections. Non-citizens comprise about 7 percent of the 328.7 million people living in the United States. Census questionnaires have not included a citizenship question since 1950.

The Supreme Court is reviewing a Jan. 15 ruling by U.S. District Judge Jesse Furman in Manhattan that Ross broke a "veritable smorgasbord" of federal rules by adding the question, a decision he called "arbitrary and capricious."

Furman also said the Voting Rights Act was a "pretextual" rationale for adding the question, a decision that Ross had "already made for other reasons."

$328.7M

Non-citizens comprise about 7 percent of the 328.7 million people living in the United States.

The judge said the change would cause many states to lose federal funding, while Arizona, California, Florida, Illinois, New York and Texas would lose congressional seats.

Furman, an appointee of Democratic President Barack Obama, stopped short of a finding that Ross intended to discriminate against immigrants.

Oral arguments at the Supreme Court are scheduled for April 23.

Steven Dillingham, who became director of the U.S. Census Bureau in January, declined to discuss Trump's tweet but said the bureau was focused on obtaining a full, complete count.

He spoke to reporters at a press briefing on Monday, one year before National Census Day marking the 2020 count.

Furman's decision came in a lawsuit brought by 18 U.S. states, 15 cities and a variety of civil rights groups.

In urging the Supreme Court to overturn Furman's ruling, Solicitor General Noel Francisco, representing the Justice Department, said Ross had discretion to add the citizenship question, and that there was a "long pedigree" in the census for asking about citizenship or country of birth.

He also said other democracies including Australia, Canada, France, Germany, Indonesia, Ireland, Mexico, Spain and the United Kingdom ask about citizenship on their censuses.

Another federal judge, Richard Seeborg in San Francisco, on March 6 also declared the citizenship question illegal.

Following that ruling, the Supreme Court said it will also decide whether Ross' actions violated the Constitution's Enumeration Clause, which sets out terms for counting people.

Adding the citizenship question could lead to an undercount of 4.2 million Hispanics alone, the Harvard Kennedy School's Shorenstein Center on Media, Politics and Public Policy estimated last month.

Officials are offering a $35,000 reward for any information leading to the arrest of a gunman who shot and killed the son of a Philadelphia Police Department official on Saturday night.

NBC Philadelphia reported that Nicholas Flacco, 20, son of the PPD chief inspector of the department's Internal Affairs Unit, was gunned down in FDR Park at about 10 p.m. Police responded to a report of a shooting in the city park Saturday night.

Witnesses told police that the suspect was dressed in all black, and fled the scene in a green sedan. Flacco and his friends were celebrating his 20th birthday and were walking through FDR Park after attending a Phillies game. He and his friends reportedly had been tailgating.

On Monday, Philadelphia Police Commissioner Richard Ross said that two groups of women had an altercation before the male shooter appeared. Ross said the man could be a third party, and that his connection to the altercation is in question along with any motive for the shooting. The gunman reportedly fired two shots, one into the air and another into the ground, and then began to walk away. Police said the gunman turned and fired his weapon at Flacco's chest from about 15 feet away.

"We don't have any idea what role this male played in it," Ross told CBS Philly. "All indications are that the people out there did not know him. There is no suggestion that he was involved in the initial argument, whatsoever. That is what makes it even more confusing. So, again, there are a lot of things that we don't know. There is no indication right now that Nicholas Flacco was involved in any physical confrontation. It appears that this individual deliberately fired a round into his chest and took his life."

The Philadelphia Fraternal Order of Police Lodge 5 is offering a $10,000 reward for anyone with information leading to an arrest. The City of Philadelphia is also offering $20,000, and the Philadelphia Firefighters & Paramedics Union Local 22 is offering $5,000, bringing the total to $35,000. "Somebody saw what happened there last night," FOP Lodge 5 President John McNesby said in a statement. "Somebody should bring them forward."

Wawa celebrates its grand opening at 13th and Chestnut. FACEBOOK

Wawa in Philly given the green light to sell beer

Beer enthusiasts of the Philly area, rejoice!

Wawa put up big bucks for your beer-drinking pleasure. According to the Philly Patch, their liquor license was approved on Friday, though it remains a mystery which Wawa was granted the right to sling suds.

Action News Philadelphia reported that Wawas in Philadelphia and Delaware counties put up bids of $186,357 and $160,357, respectively.

"We don't have any specifics available or plans we can share at this time," Wawa told Action News.

The top bidders have 14 days from the date of each Notice of Selection to remit full bid payment to the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board. After that, each auction winner has six months to declare their intentions and file a license application with the board.

Wawa submitted their bids in March, but just announced this boozy breakthrough last week. Presently, one Wawa in Chadds Ford is the sole Wawa allowed to sell beer in Pennsylvania. More than 100 Wawas are able to sell beer in other states like Florida and Virginia, but the news of green-lighted beer sales in a state with such strict liquor laws as Pennsylvania is a major victory for the chain, which used to sell beer at their location on Penn's campus back in the 1990s. This did not last long, according to Philly Voice, holding out until 2001.

According to Philly Mag, Wawa's winning bid is a steal compared suburban rates. They cite the supermarket chain Giant, which once bid more than $450,000 for a license in Abington Township. There are 19 Wawa locations within a 5-mile radius of Philly.

Many Wawa fans took to Twitter, either to enjoy or mock the announcement of booze for sale.

Jon Geeting tweeted: "It's good that [one] Wawa can sell beer now, but remember that because of PA's county quota on R licenses, every new license a Wawa or a grocery store gets, that's one less license available to a regular restaurant or bar. That sucks!!" NATE HOMAN

LA cops seek motive in shooting death of rapper Nipsey Hussle

Hussle, 33, was shot outside his Los Angeles clothing store.

Grammy-nominated rapper Nipsey Hussle was shot and killed outside his clothing store in South Los Angeles on Sunday.

Two other people were wounded in the shooting outside Marathon Clothing, the Los Angeles Times reported, citing law enforcement sources.

According to the newspaper, Hussle, 33, was shot multiple times and rushed to a hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

His death sent shockwaves through the U.S. entertainment world, with celebrities posting memories of the musician on social media.

"This doesn't make any sense!" the singer Rihanna wrote on Twitter. "My spirit is shaken by this!"

The performer and producer Pharrell Williams wrote on Twitter that Hussle was a "positive" force who "inspired millions."

The musician Drake said he and Hussle had talked about recording a song later in the year. "You were having the best run and I was so happy watching from [a] distance," Drake wrote in a message on Instagram.

The Los Angeles Police Department said in a statement that a shooting was reported at about 3:20 p.m. PDT in the area of Slauson Avenue and Crenshaw Boulevard, and that three victims were transported to a hospital where one was pronounced dead.

A police department dispatcher declined to confirm the identity of the victims and a spokesman did not respond to questions.

"You were having the best run and I was so happy watching from [a] distance."

Hussle, whose real name was Ermias Asghedom, grew up in South Los Angeles and often talked about being in a street gang during his teenage years. He had since become a community organizer, according to media reports.

Michael Avenatti makes first appearance in California embezzlement, fraud case

GETTY IMAGES

Attorney Michael Avenatti arrived at U.S. District Court in Santa Ana, California, on Monday for an initial appearance on fraud and embezzlement charges. He said nothing to reporters.

Best known for representing porn star Stormy Daniels in her legal battles with U.S. President Donald Trump, Avenatti, 48, was expected to face a detention hearing on charges of misusing a client's monetary court settlement.

He is charged in a separate U.S. District Court indictment in New York with what prosecutors said was an attempt to "shake down" Nike Inc. for more than $20 million.

He was released on $300,000 bond in the New York case and has repeatedly proclaimed his innocence of all charges.

Avenatti became a public figure and frequent cable TV guest while representing Daniels, whose real name is Stephanie Clifford, in a lawsuit against Trump over a nondisclosure agreement that in the weeks before the 2016 U.S. presidential election kept her from discussing a 2006 sexual relationship she said they had.

Avenatti also became involved in the investigation of sexual-abuse charges against R&B singer R. Kelly after giving the Chicago State's Attorney's office what he said was a tape of the performer having sex with an underage girl.

Federal charging documents in Santa Ana accuse Avenatti of using his client's $1.6 million settlement for his own purposes, including paying $216,000 to Neiman Marcus, $68,500 at a luxury watch store, almost half a million dollars to pay a home mortgage, and thousands of dollars for a Porsche.

The charges also accuse him of fraudulently obtaining $4 million in bank loans from a Mississippi bank.

Avenatti faces up to 30 years in prison on the most serious charge in California and up to 20 years for the top charge in New York.

In New York, prosecutors said Avenatti and a co-conspirator, whom they did not name, met Nike's attorneys on March 19 and told them they represented a former college basketball coach with information about Nike's involvement in a scheme to bribe high school basketball players.

They threatened to go public unless Nike hired Avenatti to conduct an internal investigation for $15 million to $25 million, and paid an additional $1.5 million to the client, according to prosecutors.

Avenatti also offered to accept a $22.5 million payment for his silence, prosecutors said. REUTERS

Alcohol, caffeine are common triggers of irregular heart rhythm

Radiofrequency ablation, or RFA. REUTERS

Atrial fibrillation, or AFib, is caused by 11 possible triggers including lack of sleep, high-sodium diet and exercise.

The most common triggers of atrial fibrillation — an irregular heart rhythm that's a leading cause of stroke — are avoidable behaviors like drinking alcohol or coffee, a recent study suggests.

People don't always realize when they're experiencing atrial fibrillation, or AFib, but some feel unpleasant chest palpitations or a racing, irregular heartbeat.

Some patients have AFib 24 hours a day. In others, the irregular heartbeat is "paroxysmal"; that is, it comes and goes. For the current study, reported in the journal Heart Rhythm, researchers surveyed 1,295 patients with symptomatic paroxysmal AFib and found the most common behaviors that triggered episodes of the arrhythmia were alcohol consumption, caffeine consumption and exercise.

The survey asked about 11 possible triggers: alcohol, caffeine, lack of sleep, exercise, not exercising, consuming cold beverages, consuming cold foods, high-sodium diet, consuming large meals, dehydration, and lying on one's left side.

About three-fourths of patients said at least one of those behaviors triggered AFib some or all of the time.

Alcohol consumption was cited by 35 percent, followed by coffee drinking (28 percent), exercise (23 percent) and lack of sleep (21 percent).

Researchers said it's possible the behaviors don't actually trigger the episodes but instead make the symptoms worse.

The study wasn't designed to tell whether cutting back on these triggers would reduce the frequency of AFib episodes.

Still, coauthor Dr. Gregory Marcus from University of California, San Francisco told Reuters Health: "Many, if not most of these triggers are modifiable, and we feel theoretically the patient does have some power to potentially influence the probability of an episode occurring."

Dr. Deepak Bhat, a cardiologist at Brigham and Women's Hospital Heart & Vascular Center in Boston who was not associated with the study, agreed. He told Reuters Health by phone, "Importantly, the information in this paper is actionable. People with episodes of atrial fibrillation that appear to be triggered by alcohol or caffeine, for example, can avoid these."

Associations between alcohol and AFib are well known, but the link with coffee is controversial, Bhat said. "Some experts dispute that association... though I have seen it in many patients," he added.

Bhat noted that while exercise is a healthy habit, strenuous exercise after long periods of not exercising has been known to trigger heart arrhythmias.

Marcus said the idea for the research came from a summit that brought together patients and researchers to identify topics patients thought were not well covered by the scientific community. Patients with atrial fibrillation unanimously agreed that they wanted to know more about triggers. REUTERS

‘Impossible’ meatless patty gets Burger King Whopper test

GETTY IMAGES

Vegetarian burgers may finally be getting the recognition they need to go mainstream. On Monday Burger King and Silicon Valley startup Impossible Foods announced the rollout of the Impossible Whopper in 59 stores in and around St. Louis, Missouri.

To mark the launch on April Fool's Day, the burger giant released a hidden-camera-style promo video showing the serving of plant-based Whoppers instead of meat to customers who marvel that they cannot tell the difference.

“We wanted to make sure we had something that lived up to the expectations of the Whopper,” said Burger King's North America president, Christopher Finazzo. “We've done sort of a blind taste test with our franchisees, with people in the office, with my partners on the executive team, and virtually nobody can tell the difference.”

The Impossible Whopper comes at an extra cost — about a dollar more than the beef patty Whopper. But Finazzo said research shows consumers are willing to pay more for the plant-based burger.

Plant-based meat substitutes have been gaining popularity as more attention is focused on the environmental hazards of industrial ranching. Finazzo said his research shows customers mainly like it for the health benefits. The Impossible Burger patty has zero cholesterol.

Impossible Foods, based in Redwood City, California, launched its first faux meat patty over two years ago. A genetically modified yeast creates the key ingredient, called heme, which makes the patties appear to bleed and taste like real meat.

Burger King is not the first to serve up a no-meat burger. Los Angeles-based Beyond Meat in early January announced it was rolling out its plant-based burger at fast-food chain Carl's Jr. Beyond Meat counts actor Leonardo DiCaprio and Microsoft founder Bill Gates as investors. It filed for an initial public offering in November.

Finazzo said Burger King also researched Beyond Meat, but decided that Impossible Foods' offering, which also counts Gates as an investor, was a better fit. “Around the taste, around the brand recognition, around the price, all those things were important factors in choosing Impossible,” he said.

Impossible Foods tailored a patty specifically for the Whopper, Impossible CEO Pat Brown said.

Couture making his voice heard in MMA

The MMA legend is now the Professional Fighters League's play-by-play broadcaster.

JEFF TOMKO
jeff.tomko@metro.us

Randy Couture will forever be one of the all-time faces of MMA, and now as the full-time voice for Professional Fighters League, or PFL, "The Natural" is hoping he can find the next combat superstar to pass the torch when the league begins next month.

Call it a case of MMA overload, but so far, even Couture admits it's been a slight challenge to determine the face of the new wave of MMA fighters, even after it's been eight years since he last entered the Octagon.

It's also nearing two decades since his first UFC battle with Chuck Liddell helped shift mixed martial arts from niche sport to one of the most popular sports in the U.S.

"It's hard to come up with one or two names," Couture says. "I'll admit [MMA's] a little watered down. There are a lot of leagues out there, and it's hard [for fans] to keep up with all the fighters, especially when there's a different event a few times each weekend."

The PFL, unique to other MMA organizations, conducts a six-week "league schedule" like pro sports teams.

Weeks 1-3 will be held at Long Island's NYCB Live (tickets are already on sale at ticketmaster.com) and the next three weeks in Atlantic City, capped with a $1 million winner-take-all championship for all six weight classes on New Year's Eve in New York City.

Another big boost for the PFL this season is that it will be televised on ESPN beginning with its May 9 fight card.

GETTY IMAGES

Couture, however, hopes the PFL's blend of up-and-coming fighters and seasoned veterans will keep fans watching. Two to look out for are a pair Long Island natives and 2018 PFL semifinalists.

Lightweight Chris Wade, who lost to eventual champion Natan Schulte (who will also be returning in 2019), and featherweight Andre Harrison, the 2017 champion (when it was the World Series of Fighting) who was 20-0 prior to his upset loss to eventual champion Lance Palmer, are faces to watch. "These are guys fans should have on their radar," Couture says.

Another name: 2012 and 2016 U.S. Olympic judo gold medalist Kayla Harrison, who will headline the PFL's women's lightweight division, a first this year. "It's amazing to have Kayla fighting with us in this tournament," Couture says. "Kayla's definitely a fighter worth watching."

Who you won't see making his PFL or MMA debut anytime soon is Chris Pratt, although if you follow the actor on social media you'll regularly see him sparring and posing with Couture at Los Angeles MMA hot spot Unbreakable Performance.

Social media went crazy this week after one of Unbreakable's founders, "NFL on Fox" star Jay Glazer, told TMZ that Pratt hits harder than the former UFC champion. Even with the verbal jabs, Couture says grappling with Pratt on the mats has been a fun experience

"It's been a lot of fun training with Chris," Couture, also a three-time All-America wrestler at Oklahoma State, says. "He's a tough dude who takes [wrestling] really seriously. And coming from a wrestling background [Pratt was a high school wrestler], I don't normally get to work with another wrestler. Hopefully Chris remembers that when he's casting his next movie.

Off the mat, Couture is also keeping busy in the weight room, staying in fighting shape for another battle on the big screen. Playing "Toll Road" in the "Expendables" franchise, Couture looks like the small guy on a set which features Hollywood heavyweights Sylvester Stallone, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Terry Crews and Jason Statham.

"I mostly do free weights now," Couture says. "Having to keep up with Sly [Stallone] on the set, I need all the strength I can get."

Why Philly is a city of champions

The new Champion store in Center City embodies everything we love about Philly.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Champion Athleticwear has been manufacturing authentic athletic apparel for years — 100 years, to be exact. This historic and iconic company knows how to make a statement with clothing, and even as the decades pass the brand shows no sign of slowing down. Some may think the brand is dated. Boy, are they wrong. Recently Champion opened a new store that is completely Philly strong, boasting plenty of fabulous Philly products, designs and more. You'll just have to see it firsthand to get the true experience. If you haven't been, you are in for a treat.

The new Philly location is the brand's fifth retail store in the U.S., and the first in the City of Brotherly Love. Champion is located right in the heart of Center City, and the great location is almost as impressive as the products.

"We are excited to come to Philadelphia with a new store that truly celebrates the city and the rich culture that makes it so special," said David Robertson, director of Champion brand marketing, in a release. "Philadelphia has a rich tradition in sports, the arts, academics and cuisine, and we look forward to becoming a part of this one-of-a-kind community. The Center City location is the perfect place for our brand to build an impactful connection with the city for years to come as we look to further enrich the community through events and unique products. From vintage Champion Philadelphia sports memorabilia to exclusive Philadelphia pieces, we're creating an immersive hub of activity that helps us to genuinely connect with our customers beyond our quality Champion products."

The new store is massive, boasting 3,040 square feet. This is also Champion's first-ever two-story venue as well. The entire second floor is dedicated to customization, allowing customers to have an interactive experience while shopping. The best part? Customization doesn't take weeks or even days — it takes just a few minutes or hours, depending on what you get. Philadelphians can pick from different colors, fonts and patches to create their own unique and special article of clothing.

According to the release, the new store will also work to transcend a typical retail space by creating a welcoming hub for the community to engage with the brand via monthly in-store activations and events such as live screen printing.

Once inside the store, be sure to check out the gorgeous mural by Alloyius Mcilwaine, who is known for his intricate and captivating works of art and a "yarn bomb" installation by Ishknits. Champion wanted to incorporate everything about Philly, including its prominent art scene, into the store. The mural is completely Philly and embodies everything that makes the city great. From the Eagles to Philly soft pretzels to the Liberty Bell, it's all in there. Both Alloyius and Ishknits drew upon Champion designs and their love for the city of Philadelphia as their inspiration for the pieces.

The Philly location will also feature one-of-a-kind merchandise like the Champion Philadelphia capsule collection. National and local collaborations will cycle in and out of the store.

Reverse Weave, the brand's signature franchise, will also be on display in a vast array of colorful sweatshirts, hoodies and joggers. Visitors to the Philadelphia Champion store will also have direct access to the brand's latest Spring 2019 collection featuring footwear, bags, hats and other exclusive items as they are released.

The new store is not just a shopping destination, it truly is a unique experience. There are reclaimed basketball-gym floors and custom benches made from lockers, wallpaper made of collages of vintage Champion ads, catalogs and other imagery allowing customers to experience the heritage of the 100-year-old brand in a modern format.

Once you walk in you are entranced and intrigued by the unique designs and laid-back atmosphere — you almost want to kick back with friends and just hang out there. Overall, the store is a beautiful homage to a city we all love so much. From the clothing to the artwork to the vibe, it's all Philly strong.

Funny at any age

Showtime's "Funny Women of a Certain Age" is available now.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Showtime's new comedy special "Funny Women of a Certain Age" features all female comics over the age of 50, which may seem unique, but that's the point. Carole Montgomery has been in the comedy game for decades and wanted a show that highlighted talent from women who truly deserve the spotlight. She is well aware of the stigma against women in comedy, especially women of a certain age. But the seasoned comedian is unafraid of showcasing those stigmas on stage; in fact, she thinks it's necessary. Montgomery hopes this stand-up show will go on for years, rotating a different cast of women who all deserve to be onstage no matter what age they are. She sat down with Metro to talk about the show, some high and low points in her career, and why the comedy world desperately needs a female makeover.

Where did the idea for "Funny Women of a Certain Age" come from?
Well, I was doing a podcast a couple of years ago with a bunch of my friends who were all women, I think all over 50. We spent the time laughing and having such a good time telling road stories and war stories, you know, from years ago. I was coming home on the subway and I remember thinking, I want to work with my friends and I want to have fun. I'm 60 years old, I don't need to work with a 20-year-old guy who just moved out from his mother's basement. I just want to work with my friends. So I told my husband, we started talking about the idea and I thought, you know what? It's not even just the war stories and working with the friends. These are all great, funny, strong women who for whatever reason didn't get that big break or they're not world-famous. But they are still some of the best female comics you're ever gonna see. We got really lucky because we got to premiere at a small comedy festival called the Cinderblock Comedy Festival, and from there, someone at the festival said they work at the Kraine Theater on the Lower East Side and they thought their boss would love this. That turned into a residency.

How did you choose the talented cast?
If only I could show you the list of people I had. A lot of it had to do with availability and who could do the show. What a lot of people forget, especially with people who are unknown, [is] they are just out there working all of the time. There were people we approached and they couldn't do it because they had a private gig that night or they were doing a corporate show or working on a cruise ship and couldn't get flown out. Vanessa and Terry and Lyn are all old friends of mine, so that was a no-brainer. Luenell I love and we knew each other from years ago in California — I've always loved her. Then, of course, Fran Drescher is an icon. We wanted to have a big name and we were lucky enough to get her.

Montgomery created "Funny Women of a Certain Age." GETTY

Do you believe there is still a stigma regarding female comedians today?
Absolutely. A lot of what the show is about involves these stories we tell about what it's like to be a woman involved in comedy. That's one of the things I'm really proud about: I wanted people to know that we have been doing this since back in the day. Now there's a lot of girls, which I'm thrilled about, but back when I started, if there were a dozen female comics working, there would always just be one woman on a show. What's fascinating about bookers is that they will always say, "Oh, we can't have two women on a show because they talk about the same thing." Which is like, really? You have male comics doing material about whatever — being married or being a dad — but that's okay. But for some reason, women couldn't possibly have different ideas.

Overall, what can people expect from the show?
Overall, this is a no-holds-barred point of view from people who have seen it all and done it all. That's the real takeaway from this. You're going to laugh.

MEANINGFUL BASEBALL IS BACK FOR THE PHILLIES IN 2019

The Phillies made easy work of the Braves during the opening series of the 2019 season. GETTY IMAGES

THE SPORTS PROFESSOR

GLEN MACNOW

@RealGlenMacnow

Well, it didn't take long to establish that fun, winning baseball has returned to South Philadelphia. Before April even broke, the Phillies had swept the defending division champions, pounded eight home runs and almost got into a brawl with the Atlanta Braves. Ahh, good times.

Everything we hoped for in the offseason arrived in a flurry. The Phillies outscored Atlanta, 23-11, over three games. Newcomers Andrew McCutchen and J.T. Realmuto shined, and a pair of 26-year-old holdovers, Rhys Hoskins and Maikel Franco, showed promise for great seasons. Take my advice: If it's not too late, go lay $100 on Hoskins to finish way over the 99.5 RBIs Vegas projected before the season. He's currently on pace for 270.

Granted, this was just the first three games of 162. But don't tell the 130,000 who packed Citizens Bank Park that what they saw doesn't portend a wonderful summer. It's been seven seasons since our great city enjoyed meaningful baseball. It's back, big time.

The Phils averaged 90 losses over those seven years. They disappeared from the national scene. Sunday marked the first time ESPN brought its top broadcast team to town since Charlie Manuel was still manager.

Speaking of which, ESPN's baseball crew rivals its MNF crew for ineptitude. The yokels gawked for two innings over cheesesteaks placed in front of them, which Alex Rodriguez called "a cheese sandwich." A-Rod also kept referring to Hoskins as "Haskins," and said that Odubel Herrera had "strucken out twice."

But I digress. The real magnet for a national network showing up (and many of those 130,000 fans) was Bryce Harper. He didn't disappoint, bashing a homer and double Sunday night and reaching base four times.

Harper's over-the-top home run celebration in the seventh inning prompted Braves reliever Shane Carle to plunk Hoskins with the next pitch — earning Carle an immediate ejection and creating stirring in both dugouts. While baseball brawls are dumb, I like the idea that Phils–Braves looks to be a heated, important rivalry again after too many years of dormancy.

Since signing with the Phils, Harper has hit every right note — from wearing Phanatic-logoed spikes on Opening Day to saluting the fans seated behind him in right field. Critics may call it pandering, and maybe some of it is, but what's not to love about a guy who hugs Eagles coach Doug Pederson and then launches a 465-foot home run?

Harper also has that magnetic quality that makes you put aside whatever you're doing and run to the TV when he's up to bat. The last player here with that attribute was young Ryan Howard.

The Phils now travel to Washington, where Harper-mania will turn to Harper Malice for spurned Nats fans. We'll enjoy another rekindled rivalry in what looks to be a deep NL East.

There are still valid concerns about the Phils, mostly centered on starting pitching. None of those were eased over the weekend by the performances of Nick Pivetta (who couldn't get out of the fifth inning Saturday) and Jake Arrieta (who issued six walks in the cold on Sunday).

But this starting lineup could be the best our town has seen since 2009, when the Phils scored 820 runs on their way to a World Series matchup against the Yankees. For all the fun it was in subsequent seasons to watch Ruben Amaro assemble those great rotations, Citizens Bank Park is built for power. The team that hits the most home runs is likely to win there.

And for now, it sure seems like that team is the one wearing red pinstripes.

Betting smart at the South Philly Turf Club

The Turf Club is conveniently located adjacent to Citizens Bank Park.

MIKE GREGER

Mike Greger is a veteran sports journalist in Philadelphia.

MIKE GREGER

This past Saturday, during the Elite Eight round of the NCAA Tournament, the neighborhood guys took over the back room at the South Philadelphia Turf Club and shouted at the big screens.

"Come on Tech! Let's get a 7-0 run to end the first half," said a grey-haired gentleman in a faded Affliction T-shirt.

"They couldn't hit the broad side of a barn against Michigan," said his younger friend, in a similar shirt, with cuffed sleeves to expose his muscles.

All told, the masses seemed more interested in simulcast horse racing than March Madness. The casino was running food specials for the tournament, including a vegetable quesadilla for $8. Reserved seats in the main dining room could be had for a $10 minimum.

"We're a little busier than normal," the bartender told me. "The Phillies are playing down the street."

As increasingly louder voices bounced around the 1970s-themed casino floor, guys in Bryce Harper jerseys flocked to the Kambi-branded kiosks to get last-minute bets in. The Phillies were leading the Braves, 7-4, when the mighty Harper stepped to the plate in the seventh inning.

Then, at the same time the horses were in the gate for the 14th race at Florida's Gulfstream Park, it happened. Harper ripped an inside fastball 465 feet into the South Philly air, his first home run in a Phillies uniform. Everyone put down their betting slips, in between long sips from their Miller High Life bottles.

"Welcome to Philly, baby!"

"Wow! He crushed that one!"

"He's going to hit a lot of one-handed home runs in that ballpark!"

That moment was frozen in time, but only for a second. The neighborhood guys weren't betting on baseball. The Florida Derby at Gulfstream was now in the home stretch, with an 80-1 shot charging hard. Meanwhile, Texas Tech was making their push to upset No. 1 seed Gonzaga.

"You keep looking at that ticket, dude," shouted one of the regulars. "It's not going to change. You still picked Gonzaga."

The accused Gonzaga bettor had no words.

"Don't fall into parlay paralysis," the regular continued. "Check his pockets! Seventeen tickets, all parlays."

The smart money was on underdog Texas Tech, as evidenced by their 75-69 win. Purdue was getting +4.5 points and seemed to be the trendy pick in the nightcap.

"Don't be fooled. That line is moving too much," a regular told me. "I'm taking Virginia."

Stupidly, I ignored his advice and Virginia went on to win, 75-60, in an epic overtime thriller. More important than winning the game, Virginia covered.

Lesson learned. Never bet against the neighborhood guys.

TWEET OF THE DAY

Virginia opened as a 5.5-point favorite over Auburn and has the best national title odds of any team in the Final Four.

Every player in the Tigers locker room already knew they were the underdog. Not one of them cared. They prefer it that way.

Philadelphia Phillies at Washington Nationals

The Phillies have posted a perfect 6-0 record to the Over in their last six Game 1s of a series going back to last season and they have gone an excellent 7-3 to the Over in their last 10 on the road where they faced a right-handed starter. The Nationals have been an Over team as well in the spot they are in here tonight as they have gone up and over the number in six of their last seven where they faced an NL East Division rival. They are also 7-2 to the Over in their last nine following a win. Throw in the fact that these two teams are 5-2 to the Over in their last seven head-to-head meetings at Nationals Park and that's where we'll have our play as we think both Eflin and Scherzer get hit around a bit in D.C. on Tuesday night.

Sports betting 101: What are futures?

VSiN

While moneylines, point spreads, and totals generally focus on the short term and specific matches, futures are long-term betting odds. They focus on events that will happen further down the line — in the future. In this case, you're betting on things like who will win a division or who will win a championship well in advance.

There are some benefits and some risks associated with betting on futures. If you win, you can earn a hefty payout. On the flip side, however, your money is locked up for a long period of time. During that time, a lot of things can go wrong. If you bet on a particular team to win the championship and one of their star players is injured, suddenly their prospects of winning do not look quite as good. Sometimes, the team may just hit a slump partway through the season and lose a lot of valuable momentum. Just like with all betting, it's important to calculate the risks and possible rewards.

In this kind of bet, the odds are set at the beginning of the season, but they can go up or down as time goes on. Once you make your bet, however, it is locked in at whatever the odds were at the time you placed the bet. This is why making a bet on a long shot early on can bring a potentially substantial payoff. At the beginning of the season, it isn't entirely clear how well the team will do over the season, and so the odds are longer, offering higher rewards. If, over the course of the season, though, a team is showing that they've got a good chance of winning, the odds for them improve, the risk goes down, and the payoff gets smaller. Choosing exactly when to make this sort of bet is important.

A blue blood and some new blood in Final Four

Virginia is the new betting favorite.

MATT YOUMANS

Matt Youmans is VSiN's Senior Editor. He spent 16 years at the Las Vegas Review-Journal as a sports betting columnist before joining VSiN.

LAS VEGAS — Long shots and underdogs are the essence of the Madness. With the calendar flipping from March to April, most of the NCAA Tournament favorites have fallen by the wayside. Zion Williamson, the most dynamic player in college basketball, is done and headed for the NBA.

Shoot those futures tickets on Duke, North Carolina, Gonzaga and Kentucky into a trash can.

The face of this Final Four is Tom Izzo. Michigan State's screaming madman has been here before, unlike the coaching company he will keep in Minneapolis, where Virginia is the only remaining No. 1 seed and Auburn and Texas Tech survived long odds.

"It shakes things up," William Hill sportsbook director Nick Bogdanovich said. "It's a good thing." When triple-digit odds are posted next to a team, it essentially means that team is being written off by bookmakers. Auburn was written off. The Westgate SuperBook offered the Tigers at 100/1 odds in mid-February. Texas Tech was an afterthought in November. After the Red Raiders were picked to finish seventh in a Big 12 preseason poll, their odds ballooned as high as 200/1.

"Before the tournament," Bogdanovich said, "a buddy called me and asked, 'Does Texas Tech have a chance?'

"I said, 'They have zero chance.' But I've had Texas Tech undervalued forever."

The Final Four long shots will be on opposite sides of the bracket in Saturday's games. Michigan State is a 3-point favorite over Texas Tech, and Virginia is a 5½-point favorite over Auburn. Bogdanovich said he expects the underdogs to draw their fair share of action.

"It's three defensive-minded teams and Auburn," Bogdanovich said.

The Tigers narrowly escaped the first round, holding off New Mexico State, 78-77, before beating blue-blood favorites Kansas, North Carolina and Kentucky to send coach Bruce Pearl to his first Final Four. Auburn, led by guards Bryce Brown and Jared Harper, runs and guns 3-pointers.

GETTY IMAGES

A year after the Cavaliers were stunned by 16th-seeded Maryland-Baltimore County in a historic first-round upset, Tony Bennett is going to his first Final Four. Virginia stopped Oregon's 10-game win streak before a wild overtime victory over hot-shooting Carsen Edwards and Purdue in the Elite Eight. The Cavs grind at the slowest tempo of any team in the nation.

"I like the matchup for the Cavs, but I'm having a hard time with this 5½-point line," said Bruce Marshall, a handicapper for The Gold Sheet.

Marshall is taking three points with Texas Tech as his best bet. Chris Beard, a former assistant to Bob Knight, is a defensive drill sergeant. The Red Raiders, who rank No. 1 in adjusted defensive efficiency (kenpom.com), held Michigan to a season-low 44 points before upending Gonzaga, 75-69, in the West Region final.

Virginia is the new NCAA championship favorite at 3/2 odds, followed by Michigan State at 7/4. The long shots — Texas Tech (4/1) and Auburn (7/1) — suddenly have a real shot.

Phillies and Flyers betting previews

MetroBet breaks down the chances of the Phillies and Flyers posting wins on Tuesday night.

Philadelphia Phillies at Washington Nationals

The Phillies couldn't have gotten off to a better start, as they swept the Braves in their initial three-game set. Harper, Maikel Franco and Andrew McCutchen all went deep twice, with Franco driving in an additional five RBI as Philadelphia piled 23 total runs on Atlanta. Max Scherzer is bound to turn around some of that good fortune, though, as he's 9-2 with a 2.64 ERA in 17 lifetime starts against the Phillies. J.T. Realmuto has just three hits in 36 at-bats against "Mad Max," while Franco is only 3-for-24.

Washington's batters have bludgeoned Phillies' scheduled starter Zach Eflin in the past, posting a .375 average and .946 OPS through 64 total at-bats. The concerning aspect of backing the Nationals here is their leaky bullpen, which pitched to 13.50 ERA against the Mets in their opening series.

Philadelphia Flyers at Dallas Stars

The Flyers (37-34-8) are struggling to score as the NHL season winds down, which spells trouble against the stingy Dallas Stars (41-31-7), who are still in the thick of the playoff hunt. The Flyers have scored just 16 goals in their last eight games (3-5) and were victims of a 3-0 shutout against the Rangers on Sunday. The Stars, meanwhile, have allowed just eight goals in their last four games, posting a 3-1 record in the process. Dallas' top snipers, center Tyler Seguin and right wing Alexander Radulov, have combined for nine points in that span.

Stars netminder Ben Bishop is nursing a lower-body injury, but Anton Khudobin, who has stopped 84 of the last 89 shots that came his way (.944 save percentage) is more than capable of picking up the slack. Expect Dallas, which is 29th in offense this year, to post a low-scoring victory. ROBERT CRISCOLA

Harper makes return to DC tonight

The new Phillies slugger returns to his old stomping grounds to face the Nationals.

Bryce Harper didn't have to wait long until a much-anticipated return to Nationals Park.

The newest Phillies slugger will make his return to Washington, D.C., tonight to face the Nationals, the team he spent the first seven years of his MLB career with.

What a seven years it was.

Harper became one of the faces of Major League Baseball in the nation's capital, averaging 26 home runs per season, garnering six All-Star selections, and winning the 2015 NL MVP Award.

In free agency this winter, though, Harper opted to cross over to Washington's NL East rivals in the Phillies, where he signed a massive 10-year, $330 million contract that will keep him in Philadelphia for the remainder of his prime years as a major-leaguer.

Nationals Park is set to be packed out for Harper's return, where the 26-year-old is prepared to face quite a reception.

"We'll see what happens," Harper told USA Today. "I really think it's going to be mixed. I think I'll be cheered, I really do. But I think I'll get booed, too. It's part of sports, right?"

Booing is normally commonplace for a player who opts to leave a franchise via free agency, especially during the peak of their career like Harper is about to enter.

"I feel like the guys who are usually traded away and come back are welcomed a little more than the guys that leave as a free agent," Harper continued. "So I don't know how that part will go. I really have no idea what to expect, but I am looking forward to it."

He'll get quite the welcome-back present as he will be facing Nationals ace and three-time Cy Young Award winner Max Scherzer in his first at-bat.

The two were teammates for the past four seasons before Harper joined the Phillies. Those memories are firmly in the rearview mirror for Scherzer, though.

"He's signed there forever, basically. Or at least forever in my career," Scherzer said, per NBC Sports. "We're going to be facing each other a lot. This is just the first. Whatever happens on Tuesday, it's going to be the course of a career of facing him. This is just Round One."

Harper is off to a solid start with his new team with two home runs in his first three games for the Phillies, who are fresh off a sweep of the defending NL East champion Atlanta Braves.

The Nationals will be expected to be in the thick of the divisional race alongside the Phillies, Braves and New York Mets this season, so there will be a premium on most interdivisional games this season.

It just so happens that tonight's game brings a little extra.
